WARREN

The grange hall is receiving a much needed, long neglected coat of paint and presents an attractive appearance.

Hundreds of tons of hay was damaged by the continued rains. While not a total loss much damage resulted. The rain was of great benefit to growing crops and filling grain bins which promise to give splendid returns.

The young friends of Master Chas. Haniff enjoyed an afternoon at his home on Thursday the occasion being his birthday. His sister, Miss Estelle and mother acted as hostess and ice cream, cake and sandwiches were enjoyed by the guests. Those present were Masters Donald and Arthur Erickson, Porter Loomis, Charles and Arnold Tarbell, Willard and Stewart Berg, William and Lester Young, Elmer Carlson and Orval and Erving Thompson. A very pleasant time was spent.

Quite an excitement exists over the discovery of "hog iron" in this vicinity. It has been known to exist for years but never was tested out until recently and the first of the week prospectors were busy examining the countryside. The ore was sent for test by A. L. Morris who picked up some last fall and the analysis showed 39 per cent metallic iron. It is necessary to have hog iron to flux the hematite ores being opened near Yankton. The discovery of the two in this part of the west is of great importance. Red hematite is found in great quantities in northern Minnesota but hog iron is shipped to Duluth from Tennessee for fluxing. The proximity of both here with the addition of lime rock makes St. Helens an admirable point for location of the manufacture of pig iron. Judge W. J. Fullerton has known of its existence for several years. The lands formerly belonging to Von Gray and lands owned by H. E. Duncan, A. J. Hollingworth and G. Hegele contain deposits which without doubt will be developed in the near future. Planning for the highway near Scappoose for the highway near Scappoose beginning on Monday. He has graded nearly all the roadbed from Scappoose to St. Helens.

Ray Briant did the twirling for the visitors until the 7th inning, the local sluggers failing to solve his delivery. In the 5th he had a wild streak and passed three batsmen and each one scored by timely hitting. Clatskanie denied the rubber once in the 9th and Scappoose did its best to tie up the score, but Briant tightened and no Scappoose man crossed the home plate. A number of people witnessed the game, and did a lot of rooting for the home team.

PUBLIC FORUM

THE RADICAL

To the Editor:

It is a month or more since I contributed anything of a serious nature. This may be due to the season of the year; summer heat, shaded streams and swimming pools are much more closely allied than sultry rooms and the painful work of thinking. One evening, however, I felt a bit industrious and, while reading Pope Leo's famous encyclical letter on "The Condition of Labor"—which is so conservative and sensibly remedial—I fell into a number of reflections on the characters of those pseudo-socialists whom we call Radicals.

A Radical is an irrational political zealot; an Utopian builder of systems in the air, shaping them with his fancy as a child shapes figures in the clouds. He is only a nominal citizen; a faithful follower of an imaginary government, but a rebel against a real one. He has not intelligence enough to distinguish between theory and practice, so he passes by the substance and clutches at the shadow. He determines very sagaciously what might have been done and what ought to have been done, if the Creator had only been as judicious as himself. He forgets that governments grow like oak trees, and supposes they are built in rigid forms like concrete houses. He reduces men to subjection by proving their absolute equality. He has nostrums for the maladies of all government; but, being prodigiously ignorant of their make-up he cannot prescribe the proper dose. His oratory is the most intractable of all his ailments. When you think his fervent philippic is coming to an end, he begins again; like a .22 calibre repeating rifle that shoots fifteen inconsequential pellets for one loading. His eloquence is a leprosy more deadly in its effects than the dreaded affliction which is isolated at Molokai. He renounces allegiance to his government that he may raise himself upon its ruin. He points out pretended flaws in the Constitution, as scheming buyers show faults in a garment, that he may get it more easily into his own hands. He would repair the evil as unscrupulous tinkers mend pots and pans, by enlarging the break or making two where there was only one. He is a fetid growth on the body politic; when he is lanced the body shall be sound again.

He promises more than he or anyone else can fulfill; because men are men and always will be so. His tongue is like a Ford—the less weight it carries the louder it rattles and the faster it goes; but, unless it starts without a crash—There are more things than earth, Horatio. Than are dreamt of in philosophy.—Shakespeare. JEREMY
